Introduction

Excursion to visit the famous Cava Winery Cordoniu, located outside of Barcelona in Sant Sadurni D' Noia, the Penedes wine region. D.O. Cava, which has a long-standing tradition of wine-making. Its most widely distributed product is Cava, the local variety of champagne.

The Codorniu family's wine business goes back to the middle of the 16th century. A document of that period states that the family had several machines and implements relating to the wine industry. In 1659 Anna Codorniu married Manuel Raventos and the families, each with a long wine tradition, were united. Years later, in 1872, Josep Raventos produced cava for the first time in Spain using the Traditional Method and established a completely new industry in the Penedes region.

The imposing winery which houses the Codorniu cellars was built by the architect Josep Puig i Cadafalch who, together with Gaudi, was one of the outstanding exponents of the school of modern architecture. His designs, of great originality and conceptual audacity, today form part of Spain's architectural heritage and are the subject of major academic studies. It is not surprising, therefore, that the Codorniu cellars were declared a National Monument of Historic and Artistic Interest in 1976, in view of their pure modernist style.

Then after the winery visit we will visit Sitges a white town overlooking a blue sea, now an important tourist resort and it also has a medieval quarter, with impressive views over the Mediterranean, with its narrow, winding cobbled streets.
